

Origins of Chinese Writing

Oracle Bones 甲骨文

The discovery of the oracle bones in China goes back to 1899, when a scholar from Peking was prescribed a remedy containing "dragon bones" for his illness; "dragon bones" were widely used in Chinese medicine and usually refer to fossils of dead animals. The scholar noticed some carvings that looked like some kind of writing on the bones he acquired from the local pharmacy. This lucky finding led eventually to the discovery of the city of Anyang, the last capital of Shang Dynasty where archeologists have found an enormous amount of these carved bones.

The inscriptions on these bones tell us that by 1200 BC Chinese writing was already a highly developed writing system which was used to record a language fairly similar to classical Chinese. Such a complex and sophisticated script certainly has a history but so far we found no traces of its predecessors.

The oracle bone inscriptions received their name after their content which is invariably related to divination. The ancient Chinese diviners used these bones as records of their activity, providing us with a detailed description of the topics that interested the Shang kings. Most of these divinations refer to hunting, warfare, weather, selection of auspicious days for ceremonies, etc.

Zha-Jiang-Mian 炸醬麵

Chinese Spaghetti

Zha-Jiang-Mein, or Chinese Spaghetti, is the theme food for this year's Chinese Festival's food court. It is one of the most popular Chinese comfort dishes. It is sweet, salty, spicy and has plenty of carbs! The rich meaty sauce is nicely contrasted by the cool refreshing vegetable garnish.

It's a popular item in Northern China and legend has it that Marco Polo got his inspiration for Italian spaghetti after spending time in China.

About the Chinese Festival and the CACC

The Chinese American Community Center (CACC) is a nonprofit, nonsectarian, nonpartisan and independent organization founded in 1982 by a group of Chinese Americans in the Delaware area. The purpose is to promote the exchange and integration of Chinese and American cultures. We provide multi-faceted services to the community, such as the early childhood education by the CACC Montessori School, summer camps, Chinese School, culture camps, clubs of various recreational interests and Senior Club, etc.

CACC has proudly presented the Chinese Festival for the past 15 years. Our mission is to foster the understanding and appreciation of Chinese culture and heritage through exhibits, performances, and cuisines. The festival provides opportunities for interaction and collaboration between the CACC community and the community at large.
